Domaine La Foncaudière Attracts Rave Reviews

Learn to cook haute cuisine in total luxury.

The estate of Domaine La Foncaudière, near Bergerac in the Dordogne, has been receiving the most amazing reviews from guests and professional reviewers alike. And that's just for the hospitality. All seem stunned at the level of luxury they experience there:

"Staying here has made a press trip feel like a holiday. If I could have indulged myself more, I would have done, but your hospitality has defeated me." - Tony Bowes, from The Travel & Leisure Magazine. But the bespoke chef at the Domaine, Vlado Skovrlj also runs cooking courses, where guests learn to shop, cook and match wine for the rich and varied local cuisine.

During Vlado's 4 day course, guests learn how to produce bouillons, fonds and sauces, and use them in making scrumptious French dishes. They are also given demonstrations of the de-boning and stuffing of fish and poultry. All in ultimate comfort and a friendly atmosphere.

During the wine tasting sessions at award winning Chateau Masburel, guests taste and are given explanations about regional wines, as well as learning about wine and food combinations. After each lesson, all the 'students' enjoy the dishes everyone has prepared as a group, along with superb wines. The opportunity to shop at the nearby markets and enjoy lunch at local gastronomic restaurants tops off the perfect foodie's luxury break.

Help for Vegetarians

Being a vegetarian in France can be hard...

Vegetarianism is a relatively new concept for the French, and one which is frequently misunderstood, especially outside the big cities. France does not have the history of intensive farming that the UK has suffered, and, being far more rural and sparsely populated, its citizens are used to honest, kind, farm-produced or wild meat. This means that the French people have had less reason to reject meat, and therefore less reason to contemplate the whole issue of eating creatures, including wild fish or game. If you have chosen to abstain from meat and fish, French restaurant menus and eating at French friend's homes can become embarrassing and a chore. For help, take a look at Vegetarian France.
